When they arrived at the wood east of Janewille and a shoot distance beyond the residence of the Mesons Spaulding, Mayberry rose in the buggy with the pratence of buttoning his coat, struck Algar upon the forehead three times, and felled him to the bottom of the buggy. He then drove the horse and buggy into the woods about ten rod.—threw the body of Algar out, and commenced searching his pockets for money. Algar revived, such though the wounds he had received, would, inevitably, have resulted in his death, he has sufficient consciousness left to beg his life. would, inertiably, have resulted in his death, he has sufficient consciousness left to beg his life, and offered to divide the money. Mayberry told him to keep still or he would gut his throat, and immediately selving him, severed it almost from ear to ear, and stabbed him in the side, three times.
